My name is Scott Frank and Bow & Arrow is my interpretation of the Willamette Valley’s humble terroir. The most important parts of that equation are the Willamette Valley and “humble.” Our growing region is frequently approached as a grand terroir destined to produce prestigious wines with an implicit Burgundian influence. I’m honored to make wine here. Still, the valley I know and love is as much a blue-collar agricultural area as it is a boutique wine destination. It’s as much a collection of relatively simple, clay dominated soils as it is home to multi-generation family estates and renowned AVA’s. Bow & Arrow uses a different template to explore this different, simpler side of the Willamette Valley. Instead of Burgundy, we pay homage to the refreshing and decidedly working-class wines of France’s Loire Valley. I’m certainly not the first person to have this notion. Loire Valley grape varieties like Melon, Chenin Blanc, and Gamay were planted in the Willamette Valley decades before I moved here from New York in 2001. As a newly immigrated grocery store wine buyer in Portland, I was always excited when local winemakers shared their interpretations of these less typical grapes. I fantasized about creating my own winery devoted exclusively to such wines. Even after one of Oregon’s great contemporary Pinot Noir and Chardonnay masters, John Paul of Cameron Winery, drafted me as his unproven assistant winemaker in 2007. The thought of bottling Loire Valley varieties was never far away. So, in 2010 we — my amazing wife Dana, a tireless army of local supporters, and me — actually made it happen. We bootstrapped it for the first few years but today, Bow & Arrow is a full-fledged, subterranean winery located in Northeast Portland. We source our fruit from a small group of reliably outstanding farmers who were willing to take a risk grafting or planting the varieties we needed and to farm them in a way that was aligned with our beliefs. While there is no one “house style”, we embrace a principal of drinkability and low intervention; a humble word that embodies the spirit of wine drinking we celebrate.

2022 Willamette Valley Pinot Noir

‘25 Best Pinot Noirs’ -Vinepair 2024

This joyful little bottle is sourced from various sites in the Willamette Valley (Arbre Vert, Chehalem Mountains AVA; Johan, Van Duzer Corridor AVA; Hughes Hollow, South Salem Hills) and is made with carbonic maceration, resulting in a wildly aromatic wine with plenty of tart super crunchy red fruits. Fermented in 1.5 - 3 ton fermenters with approximately 15% whole cluster. Aged in barrique naturally with the odd 500L puncheon here and there. Aged for one year before bottling. Made with minimal intervention, this is pure Oregon "glou glou" at its finest.

2023 Willamette Valley Gamay Noir

Sourced from Eola Springs (Eola-Amity Hills AVA) and Lonely Llama (Yamhill County AVA). 100% destemmed and fermented in open top tanks. Pressed into old oak barrels and aged for eight months. Bright red fruits like raspberry and cherry, with hints of floral notes, earthy undertones, and a touch of spice. Juicy red berries dominate, complemented by notes of plum and cranberry. There's often a subtle minerality and a refreshing acidity that adds to its liveliness.
