

ARDNAMURCHAN DISTILLERY

SCOTLAND'S GREENEST DISTILLERY

'Ardnamurchan is unquestionably producing a style of spirit with clear charisma.' - Whisky Mag

Legal distilling was unknown on the remote Ardnamurchan peninsula until independent bottler Adelphi opened its distillery there in 2014. This is not however the first distillery to bear the Adelphi name. The original was built in the Gorbals district of Glasgow in 1826, passing into the hands of Archibald Walker in 1880, making the firm the only distiller to make whisky in Scotland, Ireland and England. By 1887 it was producing over 500,000 gallons of both malt and grain whisky a year. It was bought by DCL in 1903 and its pot stills stopped four years later. Grain was made until 1932. The site is now where Glasgow's Central Mosque stands. Archibald Walker's great-grandson, Jamie, started Adelphi as an independent bottler in 1993. Its current owners bought the firm in 2004. The Ardnamurchan peninsula is a wonderfully remote “finger” of rocky land that stretches out to the furthest westerly point of the UK, just to the north of the Isle of Mull, and south of the Isle of Skye. It is accessed initially by a small ferry, and then by a narrow and twisty single track road. It's famous for its outstanding and untouched beauty and abundance of natural resources. The Ardnamurchan Distillery opened in July 2014 and is situated half way along the peninsula in the small village of Glenbeg. The distillery was built to meet the challenges of a sustainable future using exclusively renewable local energy sources. Whisky is a 'natural' product and the distillery has ensured that this is reflected in the way they operate. Uniquely in the whisky industry, all the power and heat requirements for the Ardnamurchan Distillery come from local renewables – the river that provides the distillery's cooling water has a hydro-electricity generator and the biomass boiler is fueled by woodchip from local forestry – the overall footprint of the distillery is a light one. In addition, the by-products of the whisky-making process are recycled on the peninsula – the still energy-rich draff (what's left in the mash tun) is combined with the pot ale to produce animal feed for use on the peninsula.

Ardnamurchan Highland Single Malt Whisky 6/.700L

'Top 20 Whiskies of 2021' -Whisky Advocate

“Shows its youth at times, but there's a fullness to the profile which feels convincingly - and reassuringly - 'Highland'. Expect a classically highland character filled with pungent citrus oil, baked fruit, honey and roasted nuts. The peat comes through the on the palate more offering some great salinity, deep umami, zingy grapefruit peel, roasted pear and a splendid campfire smoke on the finish. An absolutely exceptional additional to the single malt pantheon.” -Whisky Magazine

Comprised of a 50/50 split of peated and unpeated whiskies, matured in a 65%/35% mixture of ex-Bourbon and ex-Sherry casks.

Ardnamurchan Single Cask 632 Whisky 6/.700L

Each step in creating our AD/632 09:15 has been carefully recorded and written to the blockchain as a guarantee of complete transparency and authenticity. It means you can trace each step and every process that went into creating this iconic whisky. Flavors of smoked bacon and maple syrup with dark cherries and salty licorice.

Barley variety: Concerto

Farm Name: Broomhall

Field Name: Brucefield

Average hours of fermentations: 76

Cask Type: Spanish Oak Oloroso

Wood/Fill: Hogshead

Spirit Type: Peated

